Did you know....

Butterflies are nearsighted
Butterflies taste with their feet
Butterflies drink from mud puddles

A butterfly can see clearly for about ten feet, then everything is blurry. To attract butterflies from farther away butterfly gardens feature large clusters of bright, showy flowers.

Butterfly gardens offer colorful nectar plants (such as Red Salvia, Pentas, and Blue Porterweed) for nutrient sipping, plus a number of leafy succulent host plants (such as Parsley and Dill) for the ravenously hungry caterpillar stage of butterfly development.

Fountain Lakes new butterfly garden (on the west side of Timberlake's fountain) has all these plants and more. Our butterfly garden includes native Firebush, Giant Milkweed, Purple Sage, Lantana, Butterfly Weed, Corky-Stemmed Passion Flower, Dutchman's Pipe and even Prickly Pear cactus for Gopher Turtles that pass by.

Information on the type of butterflies our new garden will attract will be in our next article in the April edition of the 'Fountain Lakes Flash'.
